Today's question

By Friday, Marketing says it is far too low. Finance says it is wildly inflated. Both of them are replying to the same message. You did not make a calculation error. So what went wrong?

Bonus question

At a café chain with a loyalty programme, write three definitions of "active customer" that are all defensible.

DAY 3 / 30

My Answer

“ Active customer" changes its number depending on who's asking ”

Marketing

- Wants reach for campaigns & retention
- Focuses on who can be re-engaged
- Includes casual and infrequent buyers

Finance

- Wants current revenue contribution
- Focuses on who is generating value now
- Excludes anyone not contributing to current numbers

The fix is not a better formula it's asking “ when you say active, do you mean X or Y? ” before writing the query

Bonus Answer

Three definition of Loyalty programmes in “ active customers ”

Engagement

Redeems points, attends campaigns, collects offers

Frequency

Visits regularly and purchases consistently

Revenue

High spend per visit, regardless of how often they come

Day 3 lesson

Ask the specification before delivering the number
